A PASSER FOR THE GIANTS, AT LAST; GOVERNALI OBTAINED FROM YANKS

OBSERVERS who have watched the Giants this year have been unanimous in agreeing that the Polo Grounds club has few ills that could not be cured by the addition of a good passer.

The vital deficiency was remedied last Tuesday, when, in one of the outstanding player deals in National Football League history, the Giants obtained Paul Governali from the Boston Yanks in exchange for Bill Paschal and the future rights to George Connor, Notre Dame's All-America tackle.

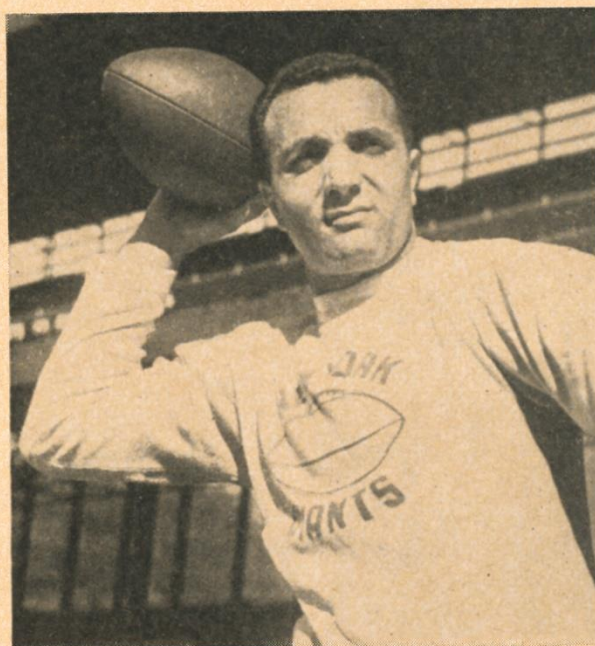

A New York boy, who starred for Evander Childs High School in the Bronx and then went on to win All-America honors at Columbia under Lou Little, Governali is one of the great passers of professional football. The Giants know his ability from bitter personal experience.

Just last Sunday, Pitching Paul threw the two touchdown passes that enabled Boston to beat New York, 14-0. On Sept. 29, in Boston, Governali threw the pass that tied the Giants, 7-7. Last year, in weather fit only for ducks, his uncannily accurate tossing brought about a 28-28 tie with the Giants that ranked as the season's biggest upset.

Not only the Giants, but all the National League, have reason to respect Governali. In his rookie professional season last year, with a young club and operating from the T-formation for the first time; Pitching Paul completed 83 out of 192 passes for 1293 yards and 13 touchdowns to wind up third in the league behind Bob Waterfield and Sid Luckman and ahead of such great pitchers as Sammy Baugh, Paul Christman, and Tommy Thompson.

With the powerful Giant line giving him protection that Boston's forwards could not offer and such sure-fingered receivers as George Franck, Ray Poole, Tex Coulter, Jim Lee Howell and Frank Liebel as targets, there is every reason to believe that Governali will improve on his 1946 record.

Operating at tailback in the Giants' single wingback formation, as he did in his Columbia days, Governali also will have a chance to bring into play his running and kicking talents, which he had little chance to demonstrate in the Boston T. A rugged 195-pounder who stands 5-feet-11, the 26-year-old Bronx youth is more than a mere passing specialist. He's a good all-around football player.

The Giant management, elated at coming home with this prize package after a long and difficult shopping expedition, wishes to express its appreciation to Ted Collins, owner of the Boston Yanks, for making Governali available in this hour of great need.

While the Yanks received one of football's best fullbacks in Paschal, the National League's top ground gainer in 1944, and a chance to bolster its line in 1948 with Connor, there still was no obligation on Boston's part to help out the Giants.

However, there is progress in cooperation and, with this deal, both clubs gain strength, to make the wide-open race for National League Eastern Division leadership more of a scramble than ever. The Giants have Gordon Paschka, the battering ram from Minnesota, and fleet Gene Roberts to fill Paschal's shoes; the Yanks have Boley Dancewicz, a great local favorite, to fling their passes.

At any rate, the Giants now have the passer they needed so sorely. Welcome back to New York and welcome to the Giants, Paul Governali!

TEX COULTER, END FOR FIRST TIME, GIANT OF WEEK AGAINST YANKS

TEX COULTER . . . shone in new role

DOING a superlative job even in an accustomed position is none to soft a touch in professional football because the standard is so high, and the expectations of the fans are just as empyrean.

To excel in a new post is something extraordinary. And that is what Tex Coulter, the 263-pound 6-foot, 4-inch former West Pointer did last Sunday in the game with the Boston Yanks. The big tackle made his first start as a left end, and he did a splendid job, making himself the Giant of the week.

Coulter stood out particularly in the snagging of a 39-yard pass from Frank Reagan early in the shindig. This would have been a vital play but for the fact that the Giants had been adjudged guilty of illegal use of the hands and the gain was thrown into the limbo of so many other useless efforts by the New York team that afternoon. On defense, Tex was well, just Tex.

Standing out with Coulter were Reagan and Gordon Paschka, the new back from Minnesota.

Paschka did some interesting and consistent gaining all through the game. But the Giants had developed a habit born of their over-anxiety and their terrific desire to win. They ran into one deadly penalty after another and, as was the case in that 39 yard pass completion from Reagan to Coulter, the fines came at the toughest moments.

Once the Giants got to the 6, and were stalled because they had been in the huddle too long. Another time this happened when they had achieved the one-yard mark. The team was rolling, but Lady Luck still refused to give it even a single smile.

That Rogers Peet look!

Quality!

That Quality look in Rogers Peet Clothes is something more than the Quality of fine woollens.

The style-genius of the modern Rogers Peet enters into it. So does the character of our kind of tailoring.

Equally important is the "perfection of fit" as we have developed it through years and years of experience.

PHILADELPHIA EAGLES HERE NOVEMBER 9

Steve Van Buren

The power-packed Philadelphia Eagles, led by Steve Van Buren, professional football's greatest running back, and Tommy Thompson, passer and T-formation quarterback extraordinary, come to town November 9 to meet the Giants in one of New York's big gridiron shows of the year.

Coached by the canny veteran, Earl (Greasy) Neale, the Eagles are rated by most experts as the team to beat for the Eastern Division title of the National Football League. In their earlier meeting with the Giants this season at Philadelphia, the predatory Birds gave Steve Owen's crew a taste of their power by winning, 23-0.

However, the Giants remain unconvinced of Philadelphia's superiority. They chose that afternoon to do everything wrong. They handed away two touchdowns and a field goal on a silver platter, their backs fell down in the clear and pass after pass was dropped in the open field. They won't make those mistakes again; you can bet on that.

Much the same thing happened last year when the Giants fumbled and stumbled around to a 24-14 defeat at Philadelphia and then rebounded in the salubrious atmosphere of the Polo Grounds to clip the Eagles' wings, 45-17. This was a turning point in New York's march to the 1946 Eastern Division title.

While it is a sure thing that the Giants will be "up" for this battle, they can count on having a rough afternoon. Although Owen and Neale are bosom pals off the field, each takes a special delight in handing the other a trouncing. There will be no punches pulled November 9. This will be another of those bruising, thrilling games that have the Polo Grounds the Sunday capitol of football for twenty-three years.

THE REDOUBTABLE D R. SUTHERLAND

Dr. John Bain (Jock) Sutherland's life story reads like one of those "success tales" that Horatio Alger manufactured in mass production many, many years ago. For here was a man who came to this country forty years ago at the age of 18, and stayed to find it the land of opportunity—even though the streets were not paved with gold. The tall, ramrod-straight coach left his home and family in Coupar Angus, Scotland, and settled in Sewickley, Pa., now a fashionable suburban sector on the outskirts of Pittsburgh.

He worked at odd jobs in the then remote little village before completing his secondary education at Oberlin Academy.

In 1913 he enrolled at the University of Pittsburgh and, at the same time, embarked on a career that was to gain him national fame.

So much has been written about the Doctor's ability as a coach that his ability as a player has been almost completely overlooked. Jock played in the first collegiate football game he ever witnessed. His coach, Joe Duff, sent him into a battle against Navy as a substitute and he made such an impression that he became a first stringer the following Saturday. For the next four seasons, he was a standout lineman, both for Duff and Duff's successor, the fabled Glenn (Pop) Warner.

It was in these days that Jock acquired a gourmet's taste for victory. As a matter of fact, he played in only one losing game during his playing career—and that against Washington & Jefferson College in 1914. The 1916 team on which he excelled was recipient of the National Championship Award promulgated by the Helm's Athletic Foundation.

Since then, the Silent Scot practically has erased the word 'lose' from his vocabulary. A few years back, a publicist at Pitt, in the understatement of the day, summed up Sutherland's horror for losing in a nutshell. "In 1930," the publicist wrote, "Jock had his first poor year since his initial season at Pitt. He lost two games . . ."

As a matter of passing, it might be noted here that Sutherland also was captain of the Panthers' track team and was intercollegiate champ in the discus and hammer throws.

After receiving his degree as a Doctor of Dental Science in 1918, the good doctor enlisted in the Army and served overseas. Upon discharge, in 1919, he moved to Lafayette College where he began a football coaching career that is almost unparalleled in modern times. He gave the Leopards of Lafayette their best football days in his five year stay, winning 33 victories against eight losses and two ties. It was here, too, that he won his first eight Eastern championships with his 1921 team.

When Pop Warner left Pitt for Stanford after the 1923 season, Dr. Sutherland was called to take his place and, at the same time, fill a responsible position in the Dental school faculty. His first season was a tough one. One newspaperman, covering the Panthers at the time, wrote that Jock's team lost games to traditional rivals and the "downtown coaches and over-enthusiastic alumni were hot after his scalp." But the reserved Scot made a notable comeback the following year and thereafter, Pitt, until Jock resigned in 1939, was recognized as one of the national collegiate football leaders.

Following his resignation at Pitt, Sutherland remained out of football for a year and then became the first "name" coach to switch from the collegiate to professional ranks by signing a contract with the Brooklyn Dodgers of the National Football League. He stayed along the banks of the Gowanus for two seasons and both times he missed winning the Eastern Pro title by a single contest.

Then, when World War II struck, the Doctor forgot about his beloved game and spent an entire year beating on the military "brass" doors before being accepted into the Navy. But here again he eventually ended up with some football players to coach.

After the War, he was lured back to the town he loved best—Pittsburgh—and signed a contract to coach Art Rooney's hitherto helpless Steelers.

Last year, he'll tell you, he had a terrible season, winning five, losing five and tying one—but fans will tell you they saw the best football "since the Old Man left Pittsburgh in 1939."

"THEY SHALL NOT PASS!" SLOGAN OF LEN AND BOB ON GIANT LINE

WHEN it comes to developing great defensive teams, no coach in the National League has anything on Stout Steven Owen of the Giants.

Owen's superlative abilities in that direction are stressed by the fact that in the last ten years, the Giants, with no fewer than 22 shutouts in an era of high totals, have been the toughest to score on, season after season.

The Bears show a total of 15 shutouts for the decade, with the Redskins and the Lions tied for third place with 14.

Standing out in Owen's high defensive flair is his ability to bring out great lines.

And when you analyze his skill in building fine forward walls, you find that he has had marvelous success with his guards.

In Len Younce and Bob Dobelstein, the 1947 Giants have their customary power flanking the centre. "They shall not pass!" is the slogan once again of this strong duo.

Younce, all league guard in 1946, is in his fifth season with the New York club. He is not only a grand lineman but a superlative kicker. Len came to the Giants from Oregon State. He weighs 210 pounds, stands 6 feet 1 inch in height and is married. He was quite a baseball player in college and, at Salem, Oregon, has a distinguished baseball neighbor in pitcher Bill Bevens of the Yankees.

Dobelstein hails from Bridgeport, Conn. and did his campus starring on the gridiron at the University of Tennessee. This is his second season with the New York club. He weighs 210, and stands an inch under six feet. He is 25.

Dobelstein came to the Giants last year from the Cardinals in the trade which sent the veteran Ward Cuff to Jimmy Conzelman.

NO CLUB UNBEATEN AS NATIONAL LEAGUE PUTS ON ANOTHER TERRIFIC STRUGGLE

THE 27-7 defeat of the Chicago Cardinals by the Los Angeles Rams before 70,000 football fans in the City of the Angels last Sunday left the National League without an unbeaten club.

Bob Waterfield's spectacular passing and great Ram line play stood out as Jimmy Conzelman's outfit suffered its first setback after three consecutive victories.

Los Angeles tied the Cardinals and Green Bay for the leadership of the Western half of the National League. The Packers gained a 27-10 success against Washington.

In the Eastern section, Pittsburgh took the pacemaking position with a third victory, as against two defeats—a thrilling 35-to-24 triumph over Philadelphia. Dr. Jock Sutherland's charges piled up 21 points in a glorious fourth period.

The offensive leader of the league is Los Angeles, with 116, but Pittsburgh is close, with 115.

The defensive leadership belongs to Los Angeles, with only 44 points scored against it in four games. What with one thing and another, Messrs. Waterfield and Co. are doing pretty well this season.

GIANTS LEAD STEELERS IN ALL-TIME SERIES

This is the first meeting of the season between the Giants and the Steelers. All indications are that Pittsburgh will be every bit as tough as last year, when the Steelers battled the Giants to the hilt in losing two thrilling encounters. The scores were 17-14 at Pittsburgh and 7-0 here at the Polo Grounds.

Under the skillful guidance of Dr. Jock Sutherland, one of football's all-time coaching greats, Pittsburgh is the leading exponent of rock-and-sock play in the professional game. Sutherland's teams always are noted for the ferocity of their blocking and tackling and this Steeler outfit is no exception.

Besides having what it takes to make the off-tackle slants, fullback spin bucks and wheeling deep reverses of the single wingback offense work, Pittsburgh has come up with one of the most lethal passing combinations of the National League in Tailback Johnny Clement and Left End Val Jansante. If the Giants show any disposition to gang up on their running plays, the Steelers are well equipped to take to the air.

While the Steelers have only been able to win five and tie one of their games with the Giants in a rivalry that has flourished since 1933, Sutherland has been with the team only since last year and very few coaches hold an edge over Jock. Steve Owen has reason to respect the good doctor from old. His pre-war Brooklyn teams made it too hot for comfort for superior New York elevens on many occasions.
