So Far, So Good

WITH the race half run, our Giants lead the Eastern Conference pack with five victories and one defeat. Offhand, we can't recall when they ever had such a fine record at this stage of the campaign. In last year's title-winning campaign, for example, they stood 4-2 after six games.

In the highly competitive company of the National Football League being out in front has disadvantages, as well as advantages. From here on in, every rival will be pegging at the Giants. Knocking off the favorite is a game that every one likes to play in the rough, tough pro league.

The second-half schedule is filled chock-a-block with pitfalls. Take this game with the Cardinals today. Here's a definitely improved team that began the season with high hopes but, for one reason or another, couldn't get untracked. The pieces fell in place against the Steelers last Sunday, though. From now on, the Cardinals will be hard to shave.

Running down through the list of remaining Giant games, that goes for the rest of the opponents, too. The Giants will tell you that their first game with the Steelers was the toughest contest they have played all season.

There's another game with the Cardinals, in the Redbirds' new second home of Minneapolis, after next Sunday's return engagement with the Steelers at the Stadium.

Winding up, the Giants will play successive Stadium games against the Redskins and Browns, then go to Washington to meet the Redskins in the finale.

The Redskins will carry a lot of pent-up frustration into their contests with the Giants. Just about everything has gone awry with Washington to date. But any team that has Eddie LeBaron and Ralph Guglielmi throwing, Don Bosseler, Jim Podoley and Ed Sutton running and Sam Baker kicking rates high respect.

As for the Browns, our team's arch-rivals from Cleveland are shadowing the Giants closely. Along with Eagles, they have a 4-2 record, embellished by last Sunday's smashing victory over the champion Baltimore Colts.

"It's never altogether a happy day when the Browns win too," said a Giant spokesman last Sunday. "But nevertheless I had to feel proud of the way the Browns handled Baltimore. Too many people are inclined to hold our division lightly. The Browns struck a big blow in our behalf."

In that respect, it should be noted, also proudly, that the Giants have posted a perfect score in East-West competition. In their two inter-divisional tests, they beat the Rams and the Packers.

Jim Lee Howell and his coaching aides, Al Sherman, Tom Landry, John Dell Isola, Ken Kavanaugh and Walt Yowarsky, are well pleased with the way things have gone to date. But like the old pros that they all are, they know that there's still a big, harder job to be done—a job that can't and won't be done by resting on laurels. So, not that they need any urging, but just to put our two cents in, let's keep telling our Giants for the rest of the season to . . . Go! Go! Go!

PRIZE-WINNERS: Alex Webster and Andy Robustelli won first weekly Coro Awards as top Giants on offense and defense against Packers.

Hail to Our Defense!

RAMPANT RUSH-LINE: Andy Robustelli, Rosy Grier, Ed Modzelewski, Jim Katcavage.

PRO football is an attacking game. Every club in the league has 50 per cent passers; fleet and shifty pass receivers; backs who can finesse or power into the open and run like deer when they get there and placekickers who can range the uprights from midfield.

The pro rules favor offense. The posts are on the line. The ball is brought 20 yards in from the sidelines after wide plays to give the attack more latitude. A player who falls may get up and run if he wasn't knocked down as the result of contact with an opponent.

Because of these factors, defense paradoxically is the more important phase of the play-for-pay game. If you are skeptical about this, look at the recent record and check which teams have won the league title.

In the last ten years, the big prize has been taken by the Eagles, Browns (three times), Rams, Lions (three times), Giants and Colts. Of these winners, only the Rams did not qualify as a rock-ribbed defensive unit. Over this decade, a flock of equally or better-endowed attacking teams failed to make the title grade for lack of sound defense.

Defensive strength has been a Giant tradition. In a more static era, Steve Owen's teams "pitched more shutouts" than any club in the league. In today's higher-scoring wide-open game, the Giants are maintaining that tradition under Jim Lee Howell and his brilliant defensive tactician, Tom Landry.

In fact, the basic pro defense of a four-man rushline of tackle-type players, three close-up line-backers and a four-man umbrella secondary is a Giant original. It stems from the 6-1-4 defense Owen devised for use against the Browns when Cleveland first came into the league. Landry, who played in that set-up under Steve, refined it to its present form on joining Howell's staff, and has received the flattery of imitation by all eleven other National League clubs.

It's great to have an effective plan. It's even greater to have personnel capable of executing it. The Giants have been fortunate in both respects.

Their umbrella men—Lindon Crow, Dick Nolan, Jim Patton and Dick Lynch—have been vigilantly far-ranging against passes and tigerish in coming up to meet running plays.

Rugged individuals all, these Giant defenders—also a closely-knit team. Hail to the Giant defense!

Rosey Grier

Having Roosevelt Grier (76) back in harness after a year in the Army gave the Giants a big boost toward the 1958 Eastern title. The amiable 270-pound giant from Linden, N. J., and Penn State is one of the best defensive tackles in the business. A man of many talents, Rosey was a shotput and discus champion in college and has professional ability as a jazz singer and pianist.

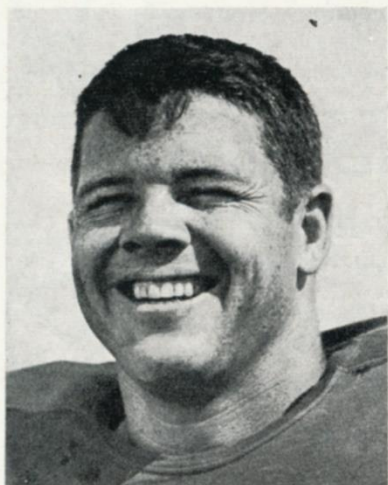

Philip King

Phil King (24), the Giants' No. 1 draft choice of 1958, is the "swing" man of the New York backfield. He's ready, willing and able to do a bang-up job at fullback and either halfback. The 6-foot 4-inch 225-pound Vanderbilt graduate is a riproaring runner and an elusive pass-catcher. He's nicknamed "Chief" because of his Cherokee ancestry.

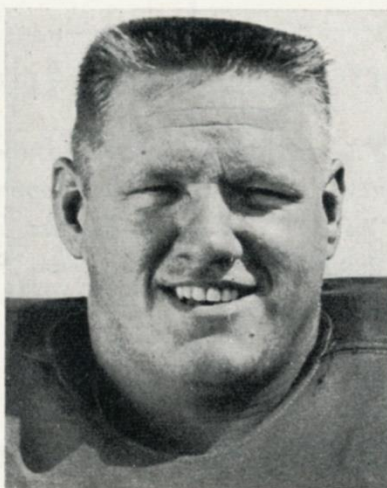

Don Chandler

Don Chandler (34), drafted No. 5 by the Giants in 1956, has provided yeoman service as a punter, kick-off man and occasional place-kicker. He has averaged 41.9, 44.6 and 44.0 for his three seasons, winning the NFL punting title as a sophomore in 1957. As graceful a kicker as there ever has been, the Florida graduate gets off his skyscraping spirals with the merest flick of his foot.

Al Barry

Al Barry (68), acquired from the Packers in a '58 trade, has done a solid job of blocking for the Giants at offensive left guard. Spry despite his 230 pounds, he's at his best leading wide plays. Al, an off-season insurance agent in South Pasadena, Calif., is a USC graduate of 1954. Two years in the Air Force interrupted his pro career.

Jim Katcavage

Jim Katcavage (75) is one of those glowing examples of how the NFL develops its own stars. At Dayton, Jim didn't have much chance to grab the spotlight. But the Giant scouts spotted his talent. He was drafted No. 4 in 1956 and has put his 230 pounds to effective use on the defensive rushline ever since. He's a Philadelphian.

Ray Wietecha

Ray Wietecha (55), who played half a dozen different positions as a Giant rookie in 1953, settled down at offensive center in 1954. If there's a better one, you'll have to prove it to Jim Lee Howell and Co. When he blocks you can hear the leather pop and his passes are as light as a feather. At Northwestern, Ray also was a crack baseball player.

Steelers Here Next Sunday

BOBBY LAYNE

THERE'LL be rich fare on next Sunday's Stadium menu. Coming up a week from today is a replay of the gripping drama enacted in Pittsburgh, and seen here on television, two weeks ago.

That was the memorable contest in which the Giants scored the first two times they had the ball, on dazzling passes of 77 and 28 yards by Charlie Conerly to Frank Gifford . . . then had to dig in on their goal line in the final minutes to preserve a 21-16 victory over the Steelers.

Coach Buddy Parker, Bobby Layne and Company still are steaming over that loss and figure to arrive here in a sullen and mutinous mood. The Steelers are tough enough under any circumstances. In this situation the Giants literally will have to fight for their lives.

Pittsburgh has one of football's dominant figures in Layne—passer, runner, kicker and field general extraordinary. Bobby's solid supporting cast includes an explosive runner in Tom (The Bomb) Tracy and a corps of fleet, elusive pass receivers headed by Jimmy Orr, Ray Mathews, Pete Brewster and Buddy Dial.

The Steelers also will present such hard-nosed defenders as Ernie Stautner, Jack Butler and Dale Dodrill. From the safety of the stands, this should be another wonderful game to watch.

Jottings on the Giants

COACH JIM LEE HOWELL calls Walt Yowarsky "our honest scout." "Walt never tells you what you want to hear or goes along with the general opinion of a player or team. He calls them as he sees them, whether or not others agree. And more often than not, he proves to be absolutely right," said Coach Howell the other day about the big former Giant tackle who joined the staff this year.

The Section Five Club will hold a "Conerly Night" dinner-dance at the Hotel Concourse Plaza on Sunday, Nov. 29, following "Conerly Day" ceremonies at the Giants-Redskins game that afternoon. Make reservations with Harry Bachrach at Section Five Club Headquarters in the Concourse Plaza. The tab is $10 per ticket for a party that would be cheap at twice the price.

Today's between-halves entertainment will be provided by the Wayne High School band from across the river in New Jersey. . . . Herb Stiner and his Swingin' Band will be on the bandstand again, too. . . . And speaking of entertainment, have you ever considered showing "Giant Highlights of '58" at your next smoker? This 16mm. sound film, with Chris Schenkel narrating, is available on request, free of charge, at the Giant office.

Giant Album

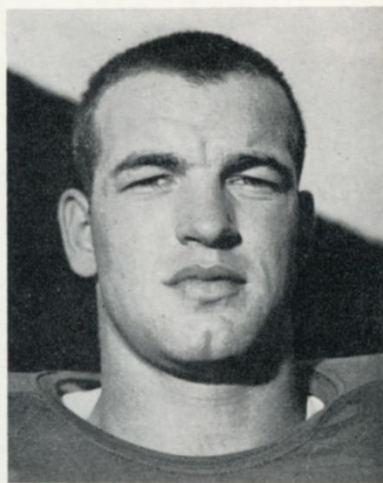

Bob Schnelker

Bob Schnelker (85) joined the Giants in 1954 by way of the Browns and Eagles. The big blond from Bowling Green University in Ohio has been one of Charlie Conerly's favorite passing targets ever since. While not extremely fast, Bob has learned well the tricks of getting loose and seldom fails to catch any ball he can reach. Going into this season he had made 21 TD receptions.

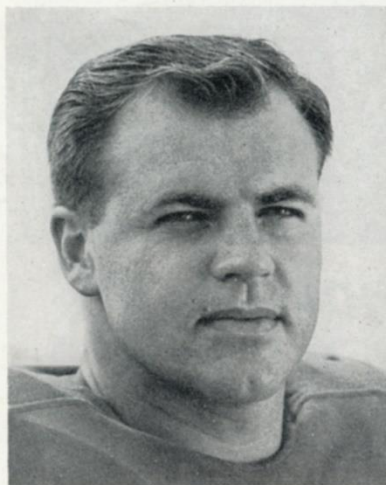

Rosey Brown

Back in 1952, the Giants took a flyer on the twenty-seventh round of the draft and picked a 19-year-old tackle from Morgan State College named Rosey Brown (79). Someone in the Giant office must have had a crystal ball. Within a couple of years, Rosey was the best offensive tackle in the league. Lighting fast and 245 pounds, he blocks with crisp decisiveness. He also pitches in on defense, as middle guard, in short-yardage situations.

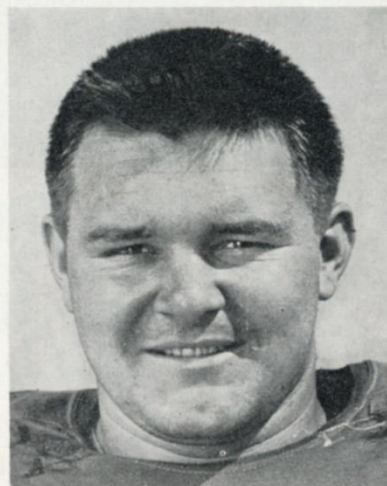

Joe Morrison

The Giants drafted Joe Morrison (40) No. 3 last winter. It shapes up as a happy choice. The rangy Cincinnati graduate is a multi-purpose back who already has seen a lot of action. Joe, 6-1, 194, fast and tough, is a strong, shifty runner; a sure pass catcher; a daring returner of punts and kick-offs. He's also serviceable on defense and, in a pinch, could play quarterback, his position for two years in college.

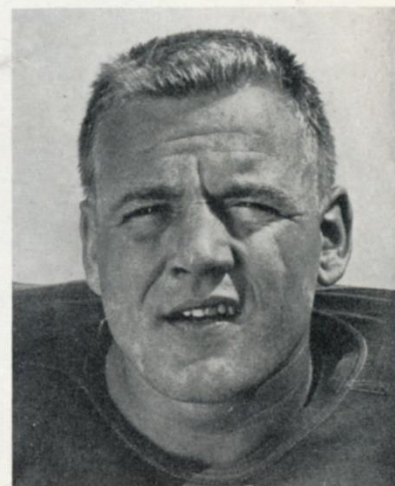

Bob Schmidt

Bob Schmidt (78) was signed by the Giants in 1958 as a free agent after he had been cut by the Cards. Carried on the Giant reserve list last season, he moved up to the varsity this fall and is doing a good job as a line spare. Bob, who stands 6-4 and weighs 245, played his college football at Minnesota.

Darrell Dess

Darrell Dess (62), a 24-year-old North Carolina State graduate out of New Castle, Pa., was acquired by the Giants from the Steelers last spring in exchange for C. R. Roberts, a reserve fullback. The brawny 235-pound Dess, an all-purpose lineman, already has made a big contribution. He filled in brilliantly at right guard while Jack Stroud was sidelined a few weeks back.

Buzz Guy

Buzz Guy (60), drafted No. 3 by the Browns in 1958, was acquired as a free agent by the Giants after he had been released by Cleveland. It was a good pick-up. The 248-pound Duke graduate has been a valuable offensive line spare and a key member of the various special units. Amazingly fast for his size, he excels at covering kicks.

Looking Over the Cardinals

GOING into the season, many prognosticators labeled the Cardinals as a formidable "dark horse" threat for the Eastern Conference title. They still may be, although the ball has not bounced right for them during the first half of the campaign.

Unhappy at developments in 1958, when the Cards scored profusely but also were an easy mark when the other team had the ball, Coach Frank (Pop) Ivy made sweeping changes in his squad during the off-season.

To put some fibre into the line, Ollie Matson, the great running starting, along with three prosophs and a four-year man, Ken Panfil, at right tackle.

After that signal triumph, the Cards went into a tailspin, losing successively to the Browns, Redskins, Browns again and Eagles, in a 28-24 heartbreaker that was decided in the final minutes.

Inexperience, particularly on the offensive unit, has had much to do with this adversity. The Cards have been starting two rookies and five second-year players on offense, with four other rookies listed as first replacements.

At quarterback, after a year of bench-warming behind M. C.

starting, along with three prosophs and a four-year man, Ken Panfil, at right tackle.

Although this young unit has yet to get really rolling, Giant scouts and other qualified observers are convinced that it has good potential.

On defense, the Cards are a lot tighter than last year. They have been really trampled on only by the Browns, who beat them 34-7 the first time around. Significantly, in the return match, the score was only 17-7.

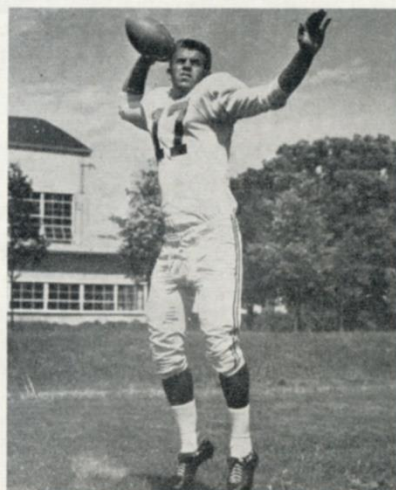

Leo Sugar, one of the league's sturdiest ends for six years, is the back, was traded to the Rams in exchange for eight players and a future draft choice. It was one of the biggest deals in National Football League history.

Slews of rookies were called up for pre-season inspection. Ten of them still remain on the roster. Another trade netted Jerry Norton, who had won all-league honors as a defensive halfback with the Eagles.

Those close to the situation assert that this definitely is a much improved Cardinal squad over the one that won two, lost nine and tied one last year. The Birds were impressive through their pre-season campaign and winged off to a Reynolds, who remains on the club, and the departed Lamar McHan, is King Hill, the 1957 All-America from Rice.

Bobby Joe Conrad, used mainly as a place-kicker as a 1958 freshman, and the experienced Mal Hammack are the halfbacks. John David Crow, the 1957 All-America from Texas A. & M. who was on his way to rookie-of-the-year rating last year when he was injured, is the fullback.

chief bulwark of the rushline, which is backed up by Carl Brettschneider, Jack Patera and Bill Koman, three hard-hitters who know their way around.

Billy Stacy of Mississippi State, as gifted an all-around varsity back as there was in the nation last year, has joined a seasoned deep secondary that has the nimble Dick (Night Train) Lane and Jimmy Hill on the wings and Norton at left safety.

There's every reason to believe that when they get fully shaken down the refurbished Cards will be quite a football team. The Giants take the field with deep respect for them.

Series Review:

GIANTS vs. CARDINALS

The Giants and the Cardinals have been meeting since the National Football League's founding days of 1926. The 34-game ledger shows 26 victories for the Giants and 8 for the Cardinals.

The Giants will take the field today looking to start a new victory streak over their old rivals. The Cardinals snapped a four-game Giant string by winning the last game between the teams, 23-6, here last year.

The Cardinals never have been able to beat the Giants twice in a row. Before and since the isolated victories by the Chicago South Siders, the Giants have clicked off four straight, three straight, four straight, three straight, five straight and four straight.

For all its one-sidedness, this has been a spectacular series, that has produced many high-scoring duels. For instance, the Giants won by 28-24 in 1946; 35-31 in 1947; 41-38 in 1949; 51-21 in 1950, and 28-21 in Chicago last year.

The Cardinals have had their big days, too. In 1948, they rolled up the highest score ever registered against the Giants to that time, beating the New Yorkers by a count of 63-35. They also were on the long end by 41-38 in 1949, 24-23 in 1952 and 35-27 in 1956.

All in all, it's a series with an action pattern.

Giant Blackboard: Draw Play

TODAY'S chalk talk will be on a play that originally gained distinction under the label of "Bear Trap." It was so called because it was first pulled around these parts by the Chicago Bears.

Technically, however, the play is generally known as the draw play.

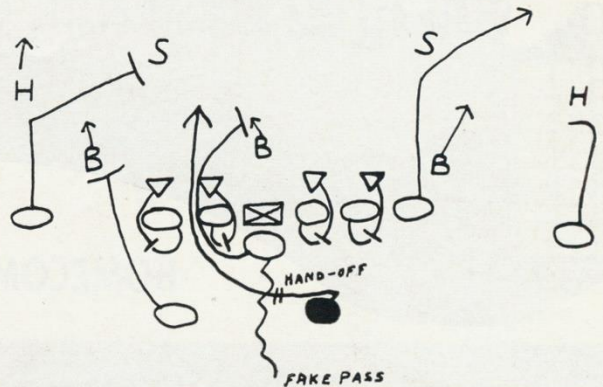

To set the scene, let's say it's third down and seven and the Giants have the ball on their 35. The situation obviously screams for a pass. Well, the defense is not deaf, you can be sure, so the chances are that it will do one of two things.

One might be to put on a six or seven-man rush in hopes of hurrying the pass. This, however, would leave them vulnerable to a quickie—remember, the Giants need only seven yards. So, more probably, they'll have their line-backers drop back to protect the shallow sectors in a seven-man zone.

When such a defensive pattern has been established by scouting reports or previous developments in the game, the Giant quarterback in command will go to the draw play.

As shown in the accompanying diagram, the Giant flanked left end, left half, right end and flanked right half go downfield, on courses calculated to occupy the attention of the four deep defenders and two outside line-backers.

The Giant linemen, instead of firing out on hitting blocks, retreat for the type of screening blocks they make on passes. To accentuate the fake of a pass, the quarterback drops straight back on taking the snap, to draw the defensive linemen into a harder charge.

En route the quarterback slips the ball to the fullback who, after taking one step to the right as though to join the protective blocking screen, holds position.

Led by the center, the fullback heads through this hole. The center's job is to take care of the middle line-backer, the chief defensive threat to this play, if the primary line blocks have been effective.

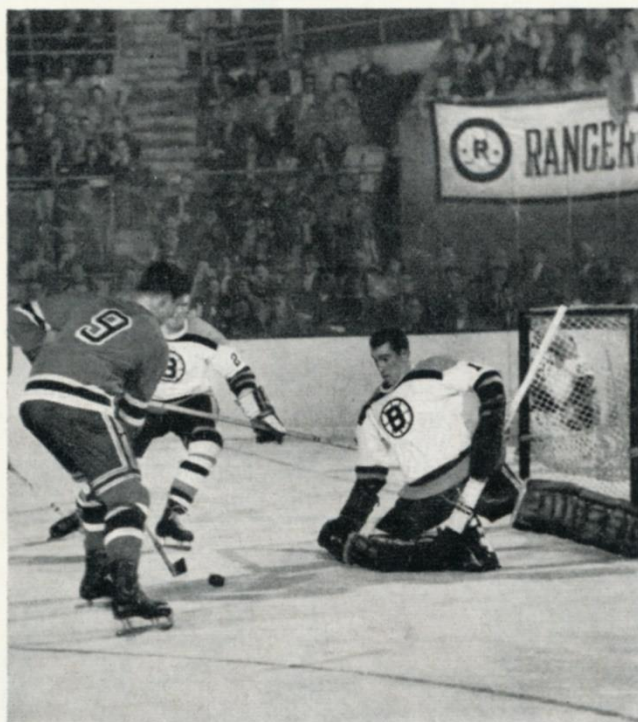

With Rosie Brown, Al Barry and Ray Wietecha making the key blocks, Mel Triplett has ripped off many fine gains on this play. Watch for it!
